Friar Lawrence: Guilty of Causing Two Needless Deaths?

The Tragedy of Romeo and Juliet by William Shakespeare (1992) is a classic play in which the main characters, Romeo and Juliet, commit suicide; however, one might argue that Friar Lawrence is the main cause of this tragedy. To set the scene, the play takes place during Elizabethan times in Verona, Italy. With regard to the main characters, Romeo and Juliet are the children of two families, the Montagues and Capulets, who are feuding with each other. Friar Lawrence is the town priest who counsels members of the two families and, most importantly, Romeo and Juliet. Unfortunately, his counsel and actions in several scenes of the play lead to Romeo and Juliet's tragic deaths.

The first reason that Friar Lawrence is responsible for Romeo and Juliet's deaths is that he performs a secret marriage ceremony for them, which is outside of the laws of the church. This secret ceremony takes place because, at the beginning of the play, Romeo and Juliet meet each other secretly, and they fall in love. This is a problem because Juliet's parents are trying to convince her to marry another young man called Paris. In order to save Juliet from marrying Paris, Romeo and Juliet decide to get married in secret. They seek the counsel of Friar Lawrence, and they ask him to marry them. When he agrees to this plan and marries them, he makes his first mistake. His position as a priest is one of responsibility; he needs to counsel members of the church to abide by the laws of the church and to work with their families. Even though he knows that Juliet is too young to marry without the permission of her parents, he marries her to Romeo in a secret ceremony anyway.

The second reason that Friar Lawrence is responsible for Romeo and Juliet's deaths is that he agrees to become their message carrier when Romeo is banished from the town. By doing this, he is maintaining the secrecy of their relationship, and he becomes responsible for making sure that the messages between Romeo and Juliet are delivered with haste and in time for them to make decisions based on the messages that have been written. Unfortunately, he does not ensure that Romeo and Juliet get each other's messages right away. As a result, they make decisions that are not based on the most up-to-date information, and their decisions result in death.

A final reason that Friar Lawrence is responsible for the deaths of Romeo and Juliet is that he gives Juliet a way to fake her own death. When Juliet asks Friar Lawrence to help her, he gives her a type of poison which she can take to make her appear to be dead. She hopes to run away with Romeo once her parents believe her to be dead. Nevertheless, priests should not be handing out poisons to teenagers! Priests should not be helping people to fool their relatives into thinking that they are dead! Because of this final mistake, Friar Lawrence's actions lead Romeo to believe that Juliet is dead, and Romeo kills himself with a knife. When Juliet awakens and sees that Romeo is dead, she kills herself, too. Thus, Friar Lawrence's irresponsible action of giving Juliet poison creates a chain reaction that leads to the deaths of two young people.

To conclude, Friar Lawrence's actions lead to two tragic deaths in this play. His initial action of marrying the couple sets up a series of circumstances related to hiding the marriage. He later makes errors in helping the lovers communicate with each other and then gives Juliet poison to help her convince her parents that she is dead. Although he seems to be trying to be helpful, he is really not fulfilling his responsible role as a priest and a counselor. Certainly, counselors are supposed to be helpful, but they are not supposed to help their church members act deceptively or deceitfully. Friar Lawrence is just as responsible for Romeo and Juliet's deaths as they are themselves.
